The DiSC Plus Assessment combines the DiSC Assessment and Values Assessment into one comprehensive report. The information provides great insights into your natural and adaptive behaviors and your most powerful motivators. By leveraging what is often new-found knowledge and self-awareness, it becomes easier for you to engage others and to align your passions and purpose.

The DiSC Assessment measures four dimensions of your behavioral style:

Decisive — A preference for problem solving and getting results.

The Family Overview:

A family is a team. This overview compares your Natural vs Adaptive styles so that you can visualize where communication strains originate. When there is significant difference between the family's natural and adaptive styles in a category, friction and frustrations will emerge between team members.

Instructions & Navigation:

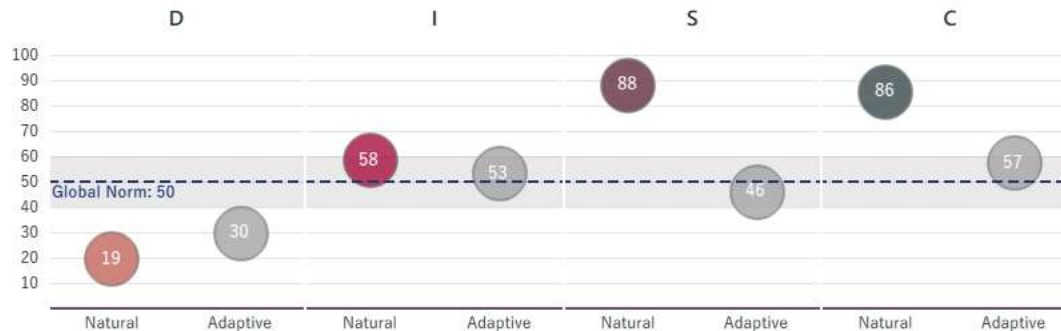

Hover to see more information about the family mean or global norm value.

Family Overview

Family Comparison of DISC Natural vs Adaptive Values

Natural vs Adaptive Styles

Natural Style:

The natural style is how you behave when you are being most natural. It is your basic style and the one you adopt when you are being authentic and true to yourself. It is also the style that you revert to when under stress or pressure. Behaving in this style, however, reduces your stress and tension and is comforting. When authentic to this style you will maximize your true potential more effectively.

Adaptive Style:

The adaptive style is how you behave when you feel you are being observed or how you behave when you are aware of your behavior. This style is less natural and less authentic for you or your true tendencies and preferences. When forced to adapt to this style for too long you may become stressed and less effective.

Values Index Comparison of Global Norm vs Family Norm

Global Norm vs Family Norm

Global Norm:

The Global Norm displayed is based on the mean result from every assessment taken historically. This chart shows the average value for all people compared to the average across all family members in the assessment. Each category in the assessment has a different global norm.

Family Norm:

The average result from all members of the family included in this assessment. Your family norm reflects the overall values of the family in each category. In cases where that norm falls above or below the global norm, that is an area of strength you can lean upon or an area for improvement and consideration in communication.
